Read-through from Dell's Jul-26 earnings

Dell (covered by J.P. Morgan U.S. Equity Analyst Joseph Cardoso) reported Jul-Q earnings before the Taiwan market open today. Our takeaways on the key implications for the Asian tech supply chain are as follows:

- Surging AI server order pipeline signals continued AI server revenue momentum. Dell's Jul-Q AI server revenue came in at US$16.4bn, ahead of prior guidance of US$15.5bn. The company booked a record US$60.9bn in AI new orders during the quarter (more than double Street consensus ~US$25bn), sending order backlog to US$95bn, up from US$51bn last quarter. The demand is broad-based across neo-clouds, sovereigns, and enterprise customers, which is consistent with the supply chain feedback of the strong AI demand. Management guided for AI server revenue to be US$19bn (QoQ 16%) in Oct-Q and US$74bn for the full year (raised from US$60bn in prior quarter), which implies an acceleration in 2H revenue growth (~+27% HoH). The strong AI server demand outlook bodes well for Wistron (sole NVL72 compute tray supplier for Dell) and AI server brands such as Lenovo and ASUSTek.
- Better-than-expected traditional server / storage demand. Dell's traditional server revenues were up 122% YoY in Jul-Q, driven by resilient demand and potential share gains. Management attributes the demand strength to both traditional workload refresh needs and rising CPU compute demand to support agentic AI workflows. Management guided for sequential growth in the traditional server pipeline in 2H and over 100% YoY growth for the full year (versus +60% previously). On the storage side, Dell's revenue was up 26% YoY and management saw a stronger demand outlook in enterprise storage due to strong demand for Dell's IP portfolio and unstructured storage solutions. Dell expects enterprises to continue modernizing storage as data growth raises availability and security needs. Overall, ISG operating margin expanded to 15% (up 450 bps QoQ / 620 bps YoY) on significant scale and strong demand across the business, echoing Lenovo/SMCI's feedback. Strong general server outlook bodes well for Wiwynn and ASPEED.
- PC demand slowdown with emerging PC margin pressure from memory cost hikes. Dell's CSG revenue rose 20% YoY in Jul-Q with resilient commercial demand. Commercial/Consumer PC revenues grew 22%/7% YoY, driven by continued Win11 replacement, product mix adjustments, and pricing actions. However, the company sees more cost-sensitive customers pushing out the replacement demand, implying lower units in 2H negative price elasticity. Dell's CSG margin came in at 7.6% in Jul-Q, much better than prior guidance of 6% on pricing and benefits of scale. Looking ahead, management guided CSG margins to be down to ~6% mainly due to rising memory costs. This is in line with HPQ's outlook for a softening OPM (<4.6%) in Oct-Q and underpins our view of margin deterioration for PC brands in the coming quarters due to component cost hikes. In the PC sector, our top avoids are MSI and Compal. This is also a bit mixed for ASUSTek.
- Stock implications. Strong neocloud/enterprise AI server demand bodes well for Dell's key L10 AI server supplier Wistron and AI server brands such as Lenovo, while we believe better-than-expected traditional enterprise server demand bodes well for Wiwynn and ASPEED. In contrast, we remain cautious on PC brands in the coming quarters due to potential unit downside from a negative price elasticity impact and emerging margin pressure. Leading PC brands (e.g., Lenovo, Dell) and those with higher premium PC exposure could be better positioned given their scale benefits and lower price elasticity.
