BofA October Asia Fund Manager Survey

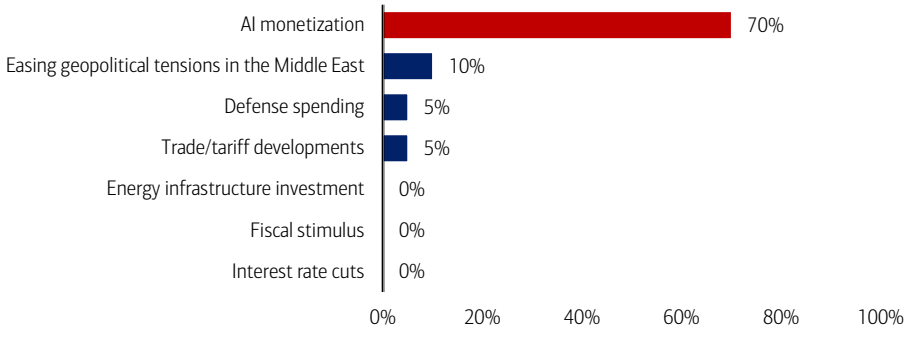

Spotlight: Investor confidence in the AI theme strengthened meaningfully in October. Concerns around AI overvaluation eased (Exhibit 11), with only 35% of investors believing AI's positive impact is fairlly or more than fully priced in (vs. 55% in Sep). Positioning also became more constructive, as 45% remain overweight AI or rotate within AI opportunities, compared with just 25% a month earlier. 70% view AI monetization as the biggest driver of APAC equity performance in next 12 months.

Macro: While growth expectations held steady, 50% now expect higher inflation, up from 25% last month. 60% expect the next BoJ rate hike to occur in Dec, in line with our Japan economist's expectation (see note).

Themes: Earnings became the dominant theme for Japan equities, surpassing BoJ policy normalization. The Earnings Revision Ratio for Japan reached a record high in Sep (see note). Expectations for a stronger semiconductor cycle recovered, while memory emerged as the market's preferred AI risk-reward opportunity (Exhibit 16).

Positioning: Taiwan and Japan remain the most favored markets (Exhibit 20), reflecting continued investor preference for technology and AI-related opportunities. For Asia ex Japan, investors rotated further into Healthcare, Materials and Industrials during the month, while reducing exposure to Insurance and consumer-related sectors (Exhibit 22). In Japan, positioning remains highly concentrated in banks and semiconductors.
